There is not a more splendid tribe of summer flowering plants than the Fuchsia, commonly called "Lady's Ear-Drop." The improvement made in their culture within the last few years in England and France, has made them universal favorites. Their management is quite simple, requiring mainly in summer a protection from the noon-day sun; they strike freely from cuttings, and should be grown in a mixture of leaf mould, rotted manure, and sods, broken up finely with a spade, but not sifted, give the pots plenty of drainage and shift frequently as they advance in growth, by this process they will continue a mass of bloom from May to December, observe to water and syringe freely when in a growing state.
